American Taxpayers Call on Secretary Geithner to Prevent 200,000 Holiday Season Foreclosures

Washington, D.C. – Treasury’s Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP) is a dismal failure. Less than one half of one percent of eligible homeowners have received a permanent loan modification. There have been over 2 million foreclosures so far this year and more than 200,000 foreclosures are projected for the month of December.

On Monday, fifty delegates from 10 states who led the recent protests targeting the American Bankers Association in Chicago are coming to the doorstep of the U.S. Treasury to tell Secretary Timothy Geithner it’s time he stand up for the American people with the same vigor that he has stood up for big banks and Wall Street.

WHAT: American taxpayers and community leaders will go to the U.S. Department of the Treasury to demand that they:

• Punish loan servicers that fail to dramatically increase the number of permanent modifications that they make available;
• Mandate principal reduction as a primary tool to prevent foreclosures, not just as a last resort;
• Make it possible for families to reapply to the program if their economic situations change. HAMP cannot be a ‘one-strike’ program;
• Make the HAMP process more transparent and implement a true appeals process so families in foreclosure can see how to qualify and have recourse if rejected by their servicer.
• Take the lead in calling for breaking up of the big banks that drove the subprime crisis.
